The tobacco internal ribosome entry site. The Tobacco mosaic virus (TMV) coat protein (CP) is an eukaryotic cellular protein, because of its roles in viral replication, in the biogenesis of viral particles and in the infection cycle of many viruses. Certain mutations in the coat protein gene (CP) can change the subcellular localization of the protein. The subcellular localization of this CP depends on the N-terminal amino acid of the protein. Thus, the N-terminal region of the coat protein is important for the function of the protein. This is a new finding for the function of the coat protein. The N-terminal region of the coat protein of tobacco mosaic virus contains an internal ribosome entry site (IRES). This IRES could be the first example of an IRES in a non-viral gene. The IRES consists of a long stem-loop structure with a 5'-terminal pseudoknot and a 3'-terminal stem-loop. This structural feature of the IRES has not yet been found in any other known IRES.WG 1: "Home": (Company projects can be seen as a part of change processes.
